PRESENTED BY WILLIAM D. HYDER

1163rd meeting, March 27, 2013

John Jencek presented his talk, Roman Republican Coins.

John presented a basic overview of the history of Republican coinage and brought a number of representative samples for members to examine. The Greeks early coinage efforts were intended to facilitate their extensive trade links around 600 to 700 B.C. These early coins were made of electrum, a mix of gold and silver that some think was a natural occurring alloy. By 450 B.C., Greek coins had become artistic works of art intended to demonstrate the prestige of the issuer as well as facilitating trade.

Romans at this time were using the Aes rude, rough bronze ingots, from the 6th Century through the 4th Century B.C. Cast bronze bars, Aes signatum, with designs replaced the crude ingots in the 3rd Century. The Aes grave, a large bronze cast coin appeared after 289 B.C. with a Janus head and a ship prow as obverse and reverse designs. These were still tokens of value as no actual value was printed on them. The first silver Roman didrachms were struck around 235 B.C. when Rome acquired large amounts of gold and silver in tribute from Carthage following the first Punic War. The first gold coins were likely struck around the time of the second Punic War.

The first silver denarius was struck around 218 B.C. and the silver standard remained relatively stable and endured for nearly 400 years. Designs changed with different moneymakers and political events. The series includes a range of artistic and political expression making for an interesting series to collect.

Exhibits included:

David shared five and ten dollar star notes released by the government as part of a special Millennium set of coins and currency.

Stephen shared a bronze Egyptian coin tariffed as a silver drachm, hence its large size.

Dan exhibited a 1932 silver proof medal commemorating the German ship Niobe and an 1888 Frederick of Prussia death thaler. He also displayed a set of early copies of the 1796 Castorland medal.

Bill exhibited a set of Celtic coins made near Paris along with their Roman Republican prototypes.

Catz displayed a 2007 Mongolian commemorative featuring a Wolverine.

Michael exhibited a 1939 SF/NY world's fair medal from Argentina featuring a wine press. He also shared an 1890 San Francisco Chronicle so-called dollar.

Mark shared an 1895 Argentinian Essay coin, El Salvador coins struck at San Francisco and Philadelphia, and a large medal struck in 1960. He also displayed a check from a San Francisco bank for a hydraulic mining company located in North Bloomfield.

Federico shared a Mexico token probably issued for clearing a field, a 1929 Costa Rica five centavo, and two Italian medals.

Jerry exhibited three early San Francisco badges including a homemade badge for the 1915 PPIE and an 1874 BDFGA badge with the name William Dunphy. The meaning of BDFGA remains unsolved.
