Paul V. Turner presented on Foreign Coins Minted in the US

Inspired by San Francisco mint marked Philippines coinage owned by his father, Paul began collecting and researching foreign coins minted at US Mints with a focus primarily on San Francisco minted coins. The US Mint began minting coinage for other countries in 1876 with Venezuela being the first. The most recent being a commemorative 1000 kroner for Iceland. Coinage design was usually a collaboration between the US Mint and the foreign government.

WWII created a greater demand for the US Mint to strike coinage for other countries. Paul noted that records don't always agree as which foreign coins were struck by the US Mint (Haiti and Nepal are examples) and the primary source on foreign coins, The Krause Catalog, often omits details on where a coin was struck. While certain coins have well established documentation attesting to their US Mint origin such as the coinage of Hawaii, others can be identified as US Mint products by the mint mark (Guatemala, Ecuador, Honduras) or only by packaging that identifies it as US Mint struck. Adding to the confusion, sometimes multiple mints struck the same coin. It is possible to identify some of these examples as US mint products coin based solely on die variety or the lack of a mint mark. Paul also brought in a large collection of US Minted foreign coins with and without mintmarks for exhibition. Thank you Paul
